INTER UNIVERSITY ELOCUTION COMPETITION

10th December, 2019

Organized by Debate, Elocution and Other Competition Committee and Skill-Will Club

An inter-university elocution competition was organized at Orange City College of Social Work, Nagpur on 10th December, 2019 on the eve of International Human Rights Day and 20th College Foundation Day. Orange City College of Social Work, Nagpur has completed its 20 glorious year of providing education to the deprived and service to the mankind. Established on the eve of International Human Rights Day and striving to safeguard and promote the same, the inter-university debate competition was organized in the college campus where 35 students from Rashtrasant Tukadoji Maharaj Nagpur University, Nagpur, Santh Gadge Baba Amravati University, Amravati, Gondwana University, Gadchiroli, Mahatma Gandhi International University, Wardha, Kavi Kalidas Sanskrit University, Ramtek, Ayurvedic College, Govt. of Maharashtra etc. participated in the competition.

The chief guest Hon. Dr. Vaishnavi Mam, Dean, Interdisciplinary Studies, Rashtrasant Tukadoji Maharaj Nagpur University, Nagpur, Hon. Dr. Baban Nakhale, Head of Department of Mass Communication, Dhanwate National College, Nagpur, Hon. Mr. Tikaram Sahu, Desk Chief, Dainik Bhaskar, Nagpur and Hon. Mr. Pramod Kalbande, Co-Editor, Sakal Daily, Nagpur graced the competition. The competition had the themes viz. Challenges before Human Rights and Indian Democracy, Role of Mass Media as the Gaurdian of Democracy and Mounting Insecurity in Republic India of 21st Century and the students were expected to present their views in favour and against the themes.

The students speaking about the theme Challenges before Human Rights and Indian Democracy opined that the basic challenge before the human rights movement at that time was to document and expose the various aspects of State terror and State abuse of power. This was a challenge that the Indian human rights movement took up with great deal of political commitment, facing the wrath of the state but maintaining its integrity. The human rights violations were not individual acts or aberrations but a part of State policy; that the law enforcement agencies such as the police and armed forces were in fact involved in serious human rights violations such as torture, false encounter killings and murders. The Indian State did not represent the interests of the poor or oppressed and the it was these sections who were the prime targets of State violence. There was democratic space within India to have a vibrant human rights movement which could make an effective intervention and bring the problems before the public and even successfully challenge anti-democratic laws. In the earlier period the human rights violations took place in the context of class struggles mostly by Naxalites. The target of the human rights violations were landless peasants, urban poor and tribal peoples. Their demands were basic social, economic and cultural rights such as the right to minimum wages, abolition of the contract labour system or right to fair price for forest produce. The Indian human rights movement was broadly divided into those who emphasised social and economic rights of the poor and those who stressed on civil liberties of individuals. The first group, largely influenced by communism, focused on what they called "democratic rights"; while the social democrats and liberals focused on the classic first generation rights. Democracy is a core value of the United Nations. The UN supports democracy by promoting human rights, development, and peace and security. In the 75 years since the UN Charter was signed, the UN has done more to support democracy around the world than any other global organization. The UN promotes good governance, monitors elections, supports the civil society to strengthen democratic institutions and accountability, ensures self-determination in decolonized countries, and assists in the drafting of new constitutions in post-conflict nations.

United Nations activities in support of democracy are carried out through the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Democracy Fund, the Department of Peace Operations, the Department of Political and Peacebuilding Affairs, the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, and the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women, among others.

The students speaking on the theme Role of Mass Media as the Guardian of Democracy viewed that Media constitute the fourth pillar of democracy. The role of the media is vital in generating a democratic culture that extends beyond the political system and becomes engrained in the public consciousness over time. Media is supplying the political information that voters base their decisions on. They identify problems in our society and serve as a medium for deliberation. They also serve as watchdogs that we rely on for uncovering errors and wrongdoings by those who have power. Media is vital in generating a democratic culture that extends beyond the political system and becomes engrained in the public consciousness over time. The role of media in a democracy is as crucial as that of the politicians and should never be underestimated. This rationale is based on the notion that democracy – which recognises that people have the right to elect a government of their choosing – cannot exist in any meaningful way without the right to freedom of expression. There are many aspects to this rationale, but the fundamental concept is that in order for democracy to be effective, the citizenry that votes in elections and engages in public processes with government must be informed and must have the right to participate freely in public discourse. If there is no freedom of expression – if people are not free to share information and express a range of ideas, opinions and political views; and, the corollary to that, if people are not free to receive information in the form of a range of ideas, opinions and political views – they will not be sufficiently well informed to make appropriate and meaningful political choices, whether at the ballot box or in their interactions with government more generally.

The media can play a positive role in democracy only if there is an enabling environment that allows them to do so. They need the requisite skills for the kind of in-depth reporting that a new democracy requires. There should also be mechanisms to ensure they are held accountable to the public and that ethical and professional standards are upheld. Media independence is guaranteed if media organizations are financially viable, free from intervention of media owners and the state, and operate in a competitive environment. The media should also be accessible to as wide a segment of society as possible. Efforts to help the media should be directed toward: the protection of press rights, enhancing media accountability, building media capacity and democratising media access.

Building independent media in developing countries requires more than freedom of speech, skilled journalists, or strong business management skills. Enabling independent media to perform the crucial roles of being a watchdog over government and educating people about the issues that affect their lives also requires supporting organizations such as trade unions and professional associations for journalists, and a public educated about these roles and responsibilities of media and their function in a democratic and open society. If a democracy is to run smoothly in any country, it is a must that the media in all fairness should be given full autonomy and a free hand it deserves in airing its views among the people and no unnecessary restrictions should be imposed on it.

Media has a very big role to play in a democracy and its stature is in no way less than that of politicians. Hence it is rightly called the fourth Pillar of democracy i.e. Fourth Estate. It is through media that people become aware of so many aspects of life of which they are normally ignorant. Democracy is meaningless without a free, neutral and active media. Media is often referred to as the fourth branch of government because of the power they wield and the oversight function they exercise. The media's key role in democratic governance has been recognized since the late 17th century, and remains a fundamental principle of modern-day democratic theory and practice.

The role of the press as 'watchdog' is a traditional characterisation of the role of the news media in particular. This watchdog role can take many forms depending on the nature of the medium concerned, as well as on the state of democracy and development in a particular country. Essentially, this role is to provide information – to be the 'eyes and ears' of the public in monitoring what is happening in public life by reporting on daily events as they unfold.

The students speaking regarding the theme Mounting Insecurity in Republic India of 21st Century stated that The magnitude of these contemporary problems of violence, daily conflict and insecurity is much broader and perhaps more insidious than the scattered but debilitating wars within and between ethnic regions, religions, and/or militias unleashed by the weakening of the nation-state in recent years. Nor are we ignoring the problems directly related to post-Cold War politics, such as the break-up of competing empires and a subsequent recalibration of enemies that sustains a new form of "civilizational" warfare. This is the more "garden variety" type of insecurity and conflict that is best seen in rising homicides, accelerating crime rates (despite a decline in reportage by victims), and unprecedented levels of police corruption and impunity. Such conditions in turn push citizens (and criminals) to take matters into their own hands, either through vigilante acts or, more commonly, through the standard route of hiring private security guards, thereby fueling the environment of fear, exclusion, and insecurity.

Development scholars have been slow to examine these changes, let alone theorize their origins and effects. This is especially surprising given the fact that violence and insecurity are intricately linked to democracy and developmental conditions. On one hand, these changes are traceable to the path-dependent consequences of past decisions about economic development, governance, state formation, and industrialization that characterized the country. In prior decades, many governments were able to pursue industrialization projects because they counted on strong and/or authoritarian states that developed strong policing and military apparatuses to control both industrial and agricultural labor and consolidate state power on behalf of an emergent industrial class in competition with landed oligarchs. Thus, the state's coercive means were strengthened, undermining the judicial system and facilitating corruption and impunity with the ranks of the police and the military (if not the state itself). To be sure, such abuses of power led to demands for democratization over time. But regime democratization does not eliminate all prior institutions and practices. Even after democratic transition, many postauthoritarian regimes still faced the political and economic future with the same old coercive networks intact, especially in the rank-and-file in the police and military. For years, the state operated without effective institutional constraints as part of the bargain with the elite to guarantee state power and economic progress by policing the nation's political and economic "enemies"—be they laborers, socialists and communists, street vendors, or agrarian rebels. Thus, the coercive arms of the late developmental state became well ensconced in a networked world of impunity, corruption and crime. This is the institutional legacy of many countries of the global south, and democracy has done little to reverse it.

The closing remarks regarding the competition were provided by Hon. Mr. Pramod Kalbande, who opined that the themes selected for the elocution competition were relevant to the current scenario. He felt that such competitions were readymade platforms for churning of the ideas and concepts and often it is these competitions that facilitate as the womb for new concepts, ideologies and even policies. Moreover, when such opportunities are provided to the students, they make them introspective and extrovert at the same time. The competitions such as debate, elocution or other competitions are the stepping stone where one can find great thinkers, orators, philosophers, policy makers, etc. He said that he was happy to know that not only students from the cities, but also from the remote areas like districts Chandrapur, Gadchiroli, etc. had participated in the competition.

Hon. Dr. Vaishnavi Madam stated that debate, elocution and other such competitions proves supplementary to the socio-psycho development of the students. The colleges should not only organize such competitions, but also encourage their students to participate in such competitions, so that the all-round development of the students could be realized. The students as well seize such opportunities as and when they come across and make the most of it. The inter-university

Hon. Mr. Tikaram Sahu opined that he was surprised to know that the students at the college level had such bold views that were turning out to be an eye-opener. He felt happy that the coming generation had been so sensitive towards such issues. An appropriate turn to the thoughts, motivation, proper guidance could make a fruit laden tree out of these saplings. He congratulated the organizers for not only touching the themes, but also motivating the students to speak upon it. As an institution imparting knowledge in social work, organizing an elocution competition was truly commendable. And he hoped that such enterprises would continue in the institution in the time to come.

The results were announced by the jury. Dr. Shravani Chavan, Government Ayurvedic College, Nagpur received the first prize. The second prize went to Mr. Vinay Patil, Kamala Nehru Mahavidyalay, Nagpur. The third was claimed by Mr. Ghulam Moiduddin Sheikh, Swami Vivekanand College of Social Work, Nagpur. Whereas Ms. Prajakta Kamble, Dr. Ambedkar College of Social Work, Nagpur and Mr. Anurag Dholekar, B.P. National Institute of Social Work, Nagpur were declared as the runner-ups and received the consolation prize.

The presidential address was made by Hon. Dr. Chandansingh Rotele, President, Gram Utkarsh Shishan Sanstha, Nagpur who opined that he was happy to know that the young generation had such a keen insight upon so many pertaining issues related to national interest.

He felt optimistic that if this scenario remains unperturbed, the country has a bright future in the days to come. He congratulated all the students from various institutions from different universities for participating in the elocution competition and making it a success. He also expressed his gratitude to all the guest, without whose guidance, the competition could not be concluded. He congratulated the organizing committee for choosing such bold and relevant issues for discussion, where the opinions of the future generation could be known and for successful management of the programme. He appreciated the principal of the institution under whose patronage such a program was eventfully concluded.
